Independent Mechanics vs. the Dealership

Whether you drive a new car or one that has been around for a while, you have options on how you chose to have it serviced or repaired. Let's face it going to the garage to have your vehicle serviced can be a hassle; the time it can take, finding alternative transportation, and of course, there's the expense. So making the right decision is important. The dealership is sometimes a necessity. For example, if the car has a warranty issue that is under the factory warranty or has a recall, it must return to the dealer. Routine maintenance, however, can be performed by any qualified repair shop, even if it's still under the factory warranty.

Dealerships specialize in a specific car brand. So if you have more than one vehicle in your driveway, you would need to visit different dealerships for each brand. Also, dealerships are often overwhelmed with the number of vehicles they are working on, particularly performing recalls and warranty work. Dealerships often don't have the time to offer the personalized service we expect when it comes to the care of your vehicle. To them, you are just a number.

At L&M we can handle almost any manufacture of car as well as light- and medium-duty trucks. We also do everything we can to make you visit as convenient as possible, offering complimentary shuttle service, loaner vehicles and pickup and delivery.

Independent mechanics will inevitably be more cost-effective because they have much lower overhead to manage and like to tailor their services around your wants and needs. Building a relationship with your mechanic is in your best interest. At L&M we know your vehicle and what services are necessary using specific tools to track your history and perform preventative services. According to a Consumer Reports survey, consumers who visit local mechanics have a more satisfying experience because of the convenience and personalized service.

On a side note, we have noticed that vehicles that return to the dealers under warranty for maintenance tend to only get the minimum services necessary and often never get a proper inspection during these visits, which can lead to warranty work that gets overlooked during the warranty period. This can leave the expense of the repairs on you. At L&M, we employ two certified master technicians, and all of our technicians are certified in different areas. Here at L&M, our interest is to keep your vehicle safe and reliable for as long as you wish to keep it. Should we find an issue that should be covered under warranty, we will document the issue and send you back to the dealer with specific instructions on how to proceed with the warranty. (We do this almost every day)

Remember, L&M not only offers a two-year, nation-wide, unlimited mile warranty on our work, but we are also capable of honoring your vehicles extended car warranty. Having your vehicle inspected by L&M before the warranty expires could save you a lot of money, but there's peace of mind and vehicle that will last longer.
